

“Limited Portraits (in the repetitive life of quarantine)”

Sydney Kit

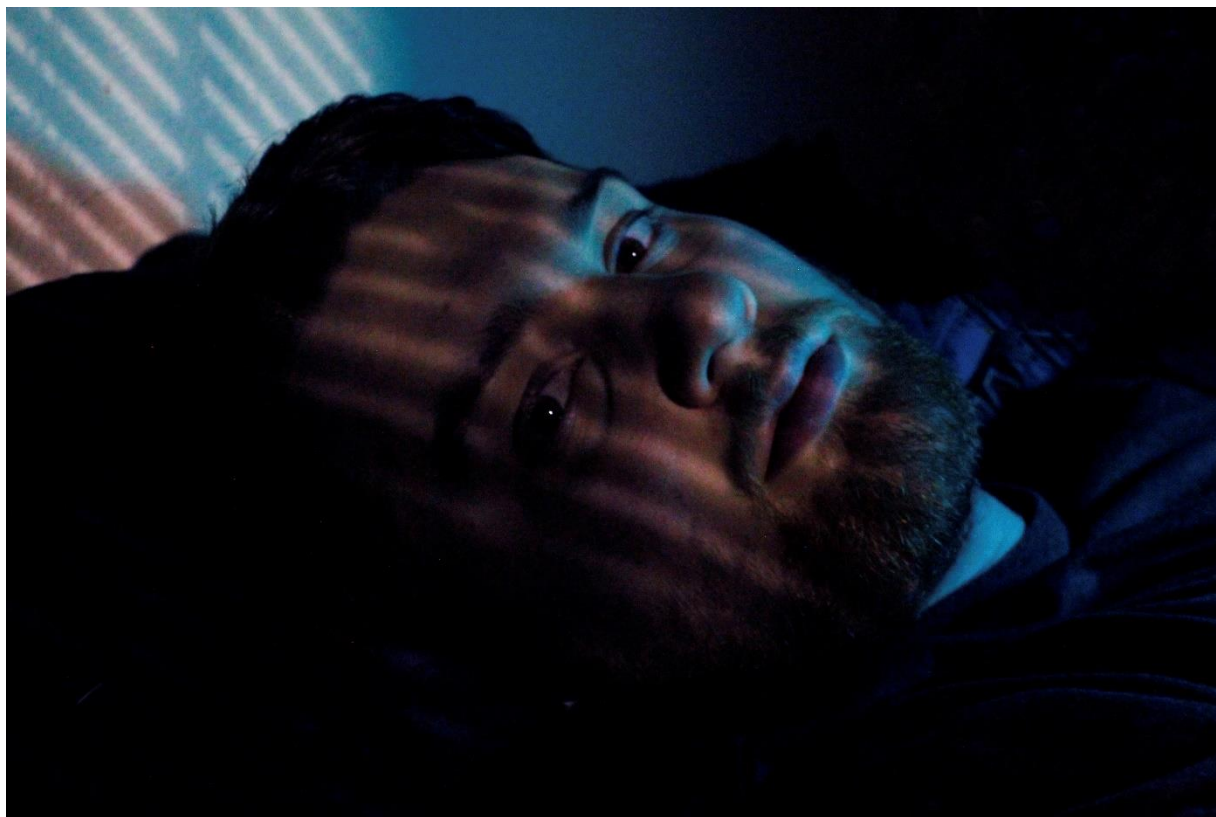

COVID-19 has created a new temporary normal, seeing millions of people quarantined to their houses. Many people have started speaking out about how bored they are, doing the same thing day after day. With the idea of repeating the same thing day after day, the concept began. The challenge was to create portraiture in every room in the house, showing the daily repeated tasks, while emphasizing the natural color of the scene. Natural and artificial light were used to dramatize the interaction of the model with the routine. This series is intended to document the dreary, seemingly never-ending quarantine we find ourselves in.
